Offshore terminals are among the hottest assets in energy. Known as Floating Storage and Regasification Units (FSRUs), a special type of ship that helps transfers LNG through Oceanic channels. The offshore facility has an advantage over land-based LNG terminals because they allow buyers fast access to the LNG market, can be built faster and are typically smaller.

- 14h00-17h00 Parallel visits
- Option 1: Visit of the AITI-KACE: Advanced Information Technology Institute
The Ghana - India Kofi Annan Centre of Excellence in ICT is Ghana's first Advanced Information Technology Institute. Founded in 2003, AITI-KACE is a world-class research facility with the focus on innovating products and services for individual and institutional advancement.

Specifically, AITI-KACE mission is to:

Deliver the highest quality ICT consultancy and advisory services to support both public and private sector. Develop and apply research and innovate technologies for socio-economic development in line with ICT4D policy implementation. Collaborate with relevant institutions to expand the frontiers of Electronics and Information Technology. Engage Ghanaian talents in ICT, electronics, and related areas both local and diaspora in the development of world-class ICT solutions, electronic products, and services. Bridge the digital divide in ICT and electronics through individual and institutional capacity building. Utilize the Intellectual Property generated by converting it to business opportunities.

Option 2: Cultural visit to the Osu Castle followed by the Accra Arts Center

Osu Castle, also known as Fort Christiansborg, is a castle located in Osu, Accra, Ghana. The first substantial fort was built by Denmark-Norway in the 1660s, though the castle has changed hands between Denmark-Norway, Portugal, the Akwamu, Britain, and finally post-Independence Ghana, and was rebuilt numerous times. For most of the castle's history, it has been the seat of government in Ghana with some interruptions, the latest when the John Kufuor administration moved the seat of government to Golden Jubilee House after 6 January 2009, which was quickly reversed by the incoming John Atta Mills administration. It also serves as the place where the late president of Ghana John Atta Mills is buried; in a bird sanctuary, overlooking the Atlantic Ocean.

The visit will then continue on to the Centre For National Culture in Accra, Ghana, better known simply as "The Arts Center". It has got everything from woven Kente cloth, wooden sculptures, earrings and other fashion accessories, the latest in African attire fashion and arts and crafts from all over Ghana.
